

Santander US Equity Hedged

10 / 2025

Fund commentary

October has been a favorable month for financial markets, which have benefited from expansionary monetary policies, positive news regarding US-China trade tariffs, positive surprises in corporate earnings, and announcements of multibillion dollar investments related to artificial intelligence and data centers.

In this environment, the S&P 500 rose +2.3%, driven by large technology companies. Health care is the other sector pulling the index up this month, while the other nine sectors lag behind. Smaller-cap companies have underperformed large-cap companies, a long-standing trend. The index has accumulated a return of 17% for the year, while almost half of its components are in negative territory for the period.

The VIX index, which reflects investor uncertainty or fear, rose sharply in the middle of the month, jumping from 16 to 25, ending October slightly above the previous month.

The fund rose +1.2% over the month, capturing just over half of the index's rise, which was held back by the cost of protection against corrections. Looking ahead to the end of the year, if the index does not post additional gains of more than 2%, the option structure would return part of the accumulated drag and add returns to the portfolio.
